Moving talent in the age of connectivity

To stay competitive in the global market, more and more organizations are increasing their international assignments through different forms.

Nearly two-thirds (65%) of companies across all industries are planning to use mobility programs for employee development purposes, according to Mercer's Global Talent Trends 2019 study.

The added business and compliance risks overburden the already-complicated process of overseeing talent strategy, analytics, cost projections and compliance adherence – not to mention ensuring that mobile workers and their families have a great experience while on assignment!

Increasing number of assignments drives the need for a proven mobility management technology
